This publication was created by National Association of Community Action Departments – Community Action Partnership in the performance of the U.S. Department of Human Services, Administration for Children and Families, Office of Community Services Grant Numbers 90ET0434 and 90ET0445. Any opinion, findings, and conclusions, or recommendations expressed in this material are those of the authors and do not necessarily reflect the views of the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, Administration for Children and Families.

Introduction

The purpose of this Technical Assistance Guide is to help a Community Action Department (referred to as a “department” in this Guide to distinguish public from nonprofit agencies) review its compliance with Category Two of the Organizational Standards (2.1-2.4) that pertain to community engagement. The first section below provides general considerations to help a department plan the review process. The next four sections address each of the Organizational Standards in this category and provide resources to help a department:

- Understand the intent and definition of the Standard;
- Identify materials to document compliance with the Standard;
- Benchmark and evaluate performance with regards to the Standard; and
- Access supports to help with compliance and improve performance.

Community engagement is the second set of Standards under the broader category, Maximum Feasible Participation. A primary objective of Community Action is to address family, department and community goals. CAAs are called to engage the community in their work and this standard highlights how it is achieved. The war on poverty is waged most effectively by coordinated community relationships and cannot be fought by a single department.

This Technical Assistance Guide helps a department answer two questions: (1) Are we in compliance with the requirements of the Organizational Standards, and (2) How well did we perform in engaging the community in the department’s work? It is important to note that departments are only required to comply with the Standards and that guidance and materials for how to review performance are intended as a capacity-building resource. Additionally, there are a number of reasons that a department should consider conducting a deeper evaluation related to the Organizational Standards for community engagement:

- Awareness of available resources in the community;
- Opportunity to strengthen community resource coordination and to decrease service duplication;
- Preparation for the next community assessment;
- Increased opportunity for the entire community to “own a stake” in its growth/development
- Leveraging opportunities and increased return on investment (ROI)

Considerations for the Review Process

This section of the Technical Assistance Guide provides questions to help departments think through the planning of the community engagement process. Questions to consider before starting include:

- How is the community engagement process for Category Two connected to the overall process for assessing the Organizational Standards? Staff involved in reviewing the Standards related to community engagement should ensure their efforts are consistent with the overall process for Standards assessment with regards to interpreting the Standards, recording findings, managing and storing documents, and conducting any necessary follow-up activities to achieve compliance.

- Are there opportunities to incorporate the review process into related activities? While there is value to conducting the review as a “stand alone” process, departments can look for opportunities to increase efficiency by including it in already planned activities. Annual updates to the data collected for community engagement activities, tripartite board/advisory body reports on existing partnerships and volunteer data, strategic planning, and development of the department’s Community Action Plan are examples of opportunities to “fold in” the review of Category Two into related processes.
- What is the appropriate level of effort for the review process? Departments should consider the costs and benefits of expending different levels of effort in assessing Category Two. If community engagement is identified as an important strategic goal or the department is in the process of strengthening its community engagement efforts, then it should consider conducting a more extensive evaluation of its previous work related to Category Two.
- Who should participate in the review process? It is possible for one staff person to complete the review alone. However, the department may consider assembling a small team to conduct a more in-depth analysis using the process suggested in this Guide. This team might include program managers, staff responsible for conducting related outreach and engagement activities, and tripartite board/advisory body members.

When the staff selected to conduct the review process are ready to begin, there are several additional questions they should consider. These include:

- How will the staff determine whether the Standards are met? Staff should always begin the review process by examining all guidance from the State CSBG Lead Agency on the interpretation of the Organizational Standards and the documentation required to show they are met. Even if the department decides not to conduct the complete review process suggested in this Guide, it is strongly suggested that the staff use the five point review scale included at the end of each section to rate its performance. This exercise helps ensure that there is consensus about whether the Standard is met and provides a benchmark against which the department can rate future performance.
- How will the staff document compliance with the Standards? Staff should determine how they will record the results of the review process and organize related files and materials to document compliance. The Review Worksheet Template included at the end of this Guide offers one option. Staff should begin by determining whether the department meets each of the Organizational Standards in Category Two using guidance from the State CSBG Lead Agency and, if conducting a full performance evaluation, how well it rates using the evaluation questions and review scale included in this Guide. Brief summaries of the findings should be recorded to document the rationale for state monitors and provide a benchmark against which to assess future performance. Staff should then list the supporting materials that document compliance (e.g. reports, web pages, and board minutes) and determine how to file the materials in a way that is easily accessible to state monitors (e.g. a document list and flash drive with scanned and uploaded files).
- How will staff manage recommendations that result from the review process? Standards that are determined to be unmet or that staff believes are potentially questionable should be addressed immediately with an action plan that concisely explains the problem and the specific steps that must be taken to achieve compliance. In addition, it is strongly suggested that staff should use the review process and resources in this Guide to make recommendations to the department on how to improve its community engagement based on their findings. Even if the review process focuses on simple compliance with the Standards rather than a more extensive evaluation, it is likely that staff can identify ways to strengthen the development and implementation of the department's community engagement process. There should be a clear "follow up" process established that details the rationale for the recommendation, specific actions to take, and who is responsible.

- How will staff archive results from the review process? When the review of the Standards is complete, staff should archive the results with those of the other categories. A good archive will include notes on how the review was conducted, who participated, any issues or "lessons learned" that are helpful to note for future reviews, and clear instructions for how to find all documents and materials referenced in the findings. Again, even if the review process has a more limited focus on compliance, it is recommended that staff include their evaluation of each standard on the five point review scale along with brief notes explaining the rationale for the finding to help benchmark performance for future reviews.

Category 2 Standards

No CAA can meet all of a community's needs independently. Formal and informal partnerships, ongoing community planning, advocacy and engagement with all sectors of the community all work together to successfully move families out of poverty and revitalize communities.

Community Action is often the backbone organization of community efforts to address poverty and community revitalization: leveraging funds, convening key partners, adding the voice of the underrepresented, and being the central coordinator of efforts. It is not an easy role to play, but a vital one for families and communities.

- Standard 2.1 The department has documented or demonstrated partnerships across the community, for specifically identified purposes; partnerships include other anti-poverty organizations in the area.
- Standard 2.2 The department utilizes information gathered from key sectors of the community in assessing needs and resources, during the community assessment process or other times. These sectors would include at minimum: community-based organizations, faith-based organizations, private sector, public sector, and educational institutions.
- Standard 2.3 The department communicates its activities and its results to the community.
- Standard 2.4 The department documents the number of volunteers and hours mobilized in support of its activities.

There are other Standards that relate to Community Engagement that the evaluation team should consider to coordinate with work on other categories of the Organizational Standards.

These include:

- Standard 1.1 The department demonstrates low-income individuals' participation in its activities.
- Standard 5.2 The department's tripartite board/advisory body either has:
1. Written procedures that document a democratic selection process for low-income board members adequate to assure that they are representative of the low-income community, or
2. Another mechanism specified by the State to assure decision-making and participation by low-income individuals in the development, planning, implementation, and evaluation of programs.

2.1 The department has documented or demonstrated partnerships across the community, for specifically identified purposes; partnerships include other anti-poverty organizations in the area.

A. Guidance on the Definition and Intent of the Standard

This standard addresses the community partnerships the department develops and participates in to help achieve its goals. CAAs typically have many types of partnerships both formal and informal. Partnerships are considered to be mutually beneficial arrangements in which each entity contributes and receives time, effort, expertise, and/or resources. Community Action is built on the partnerships that it has across the community. While CAAs may report and talk about the breadth of the relationships they have with other stakeholders, this standard speaks to the relationships that are more formalized and address specific purposes identified by the department and its partners. The primary purpose of this standard is to ensure that departments (1) routinely review their partnerships to identify any weak or missing connections with key sectors of the community, and (2) participate in partnerships that are effective and aligned with their mission to reduce poverty.

Examples of partnerships include participation in community collaboratives, memorandums of understanding, inter-agency committees, and advisory bodies. Purposes might include issues such as community awareness campaigns about poverty-related issues, programmatic focuses such as implementing a workforce development initiative, or ongoing service delivery activities such as coordinating inter-agency referrals. Departments should use their discretion in deciding which partnerships to document. Unless otherwise indicated by the State CSBG Lead Agency, it is likely not necessary to document instances of partnerships such as “one off” meetings, ongoing but minor exchanges of information, or exploratory meetings that do not lead to significant activities.

It is important to note that departments have a unique role to play fostering partnerships in their parent public agencies and with other local government entities. Departments have natural connections to other public agencies they can leverage into partnerships to support public awareness efforts, service delivery activities, and engagement of the low-income community in anti-poverty work.

Previous guidance on the definition of and intent behind requiring departments to engage in community partnerships come from four main sources – the Economic Opportunity Act, Community Services Block Grant, the Office of Economic Opportunity Instruction 6320-1, and Information Memorandum 49. Key language from each of those four sources that the review team should review include:

The Economic Opportunity Act, Title II, Section 201(a) provides for basic purpose of community action departments and programs “to stimulate a better focusing of all available local, State, private, and Federal resources upon the goal of enabling low-income families, and low-income individuals of all ages, in rural and urban areas, to attain the skills, knowledge, and motivations and secure the opportunities needed for them to become self-sufficient.”

The Community Services Block Grant Act, Section 676(b)(9) that requires “[A]n assurance that the State and eligible entities in the State will, to the maximum extent possible, coordinate programs with and form partnerships with other organizations serving low-income residents of the communities and members of the groups served by the State, including religious organizations, charitable groups, and community organizations;”

The Office of Economic Opportunity Instruction 6320-1 (1970) that states “CAA(s) must develop both a long-range strategy and specific, short-range plans for using potential resources...In developing its strategy and plans, the CAA shall take into account the areas of greatest community need, the availability of resources, and its own strengths and limitations.”

Information Memorandum 49 (2001) issued by the Office of Community Services, U.S. Department of Health and Human Services that states six national goals for Community Action that both respect the diversity of the Network and provide clear expectations of results from our efforts. Specifically, Goal Four states that “Partnerships among supporters and providers of services to low-income people are achieved.”

B. Guidance on Compliance and Documentation

The review team should always begin the process of documenting compliance with the Organizational Standards by reviewing all available guidance from the State CSBG Lead Agency on the interpretation of the Standard and required documentation. The review team should also consider any State requirements for community engagement. Specific issues the review team should consider that may affect compliance with Standard 2.1 include:

- Partnerships that only cover part of the department’s service area. Departments should review their list of partnerships to ensure they accurately reflect activities across the entirety of their service areas. Departments that serve multiple counties or municipalities may risk under-reporting their partnerships, especially if they only focus on major projects in the primary area they serve. To address this issue, one approach departments might consider is reporting on partnerships by county to illustrate the full range of their collaborative activities.
- Partnerships that include incomplete or missing statements of purpose. Departments need to include concise but descriptive explanations of all partnerships listed to comply with the standard. Each partnership should include such a description.
- Partnerships do not include anti-poverty organizations. The department must partner with other anti-poverty organizations in their service area to comply with this standard. Departments may risk being out of compliance with the standard if they only partner with anti-poverty organizations that are located outside of their service area, are not partnered with anti-poverty organizations that do exist in the geographic service area, or if the department’s partnerships do not result in actual joint activities (e.g. an MOU to collaborate on an issue that has not resulted in any tangible actions).

Departments need to provide three types of documentation to show compliance with Standard 2.1 that include (1) a list of the department’s primary partnerships, (2) the purpose of each of those partnerships, (3) proof of partnerships with other anti-poverty organizations in their service area. Documentation might include:

- MOUs, contracts, and agreements that document the partnerships listed;
- Descriptions of the purpose of the partnerships; and
- Mission statements, links to reports of program activities, or brief written confirmation from partners that they are anti-poverty organizations.

C. Beyond Compliance: Benchmarking Organizational Performance

It is strongly suggested that the review team use the questions and resources in this section to conduct an assessment of their department’s community engagement process. No matter what level of effort the team chooses, assigning a score for Standard 2.1 using the “Organizational Standards Evaluation Criteria” at the end of this Guide along with recording brief notes that detail recommendations for ways to improve future community engagement efforts help the department benchmark its performance and incorporate the ROMA cycle into the process for assessing compliance with the Organizational Standards. In addition to the materials in the resources section below, there are several basic considerations the review team can use to guide their discussion and evaluation of the community engagement process. Questions to ask include:

- Do the existing formal partnerships support the department’s strategies, programs, and services? Staff can review the department’s primary partnerships to ensure that they are aligned with the mission and support its core strategies, programs, and services. Another option is to estimate how much effort each major partnership requires to assess whether the overall level of activity truly supports the most important goals and activities of the department.
- Does the department engage key community stakeholders to build consensus on a shared policy agenda? Partnerships related to service delivery activities are obviously critical to the success of CAAs. However, it is important that departments also use their partnerships to help build a broader consensus on how the community can truly address the underlying causes of poverty. Does the department play a key role or otherwise participate in partnerships that aim to raise overall community awareness of poverty as an important issue and identify specific policy options to implement? Does the department reach out to other agencies in the public sector that support anti-poverty efforts?
- Does the department strategically engage stakeholders who can help develop new resources (funding, professional development, other community collaborations)? Building relationships with funders in the philanthropic, public, and private sectors is critical to the long-term stability and success of anti-poverty efforts. Is the department strategic about approaching potential funders to sit on advisory bodies, boards, and collaboratives? Does the department use its own funding to help leverage support from other stakeholders? Does it build relationships with local universities and community colleges that might offer professional development opportunities to staff?
- Has the department tried to engage sectors that are not usual partners (private sector, school district, etc....)? It is all too easy for departments to rely on partnerships with other organizations that have similar values and interests. However, part of building an effective anti-poverty strategy for the community as a whole requires engaging stakeholders that are not typically found “at the table” in anti-poverty efforts. Does the department try to build relationships with diverse stakeholders outside of the neighborhoods it serves, across political boundaries, or with potential competitors for “turf”?

- Does the department help its contractors engage other key stakeholders?
Departments that contract with other service providers can help these organizations strengthen their partnerships with other stakeholders in a variety of ways. This might include convening the contractors to explore opportunities for collaboration with each other, ensuring contractors participate in community events the department sponsors or participates in, and using opportunities such as the community assessment and strategic planning processes to build relationships among contractors and other key stakeholders.

2.2 The department utilizes information gathered from key sectors of the community in assessing needs and resources, during the community assessment process or other times. These sectors would include at minimum: community-based organizations, faith-based organizations, private sector, public sector, and educational institutions.

A. Guidance on the Definition and Intent of the Standard

CAAs routinely engage with and gather information from diverse sectors across the communities they serve. Standard 2.2 underscores the importance of making sure that the community needs the department addresses and the goals towards which it works reflect the diverse perspectives and interests of other stakeholders. These sectors include but are not limited to:

- Community-based organizations—United Way, Salvation Army or other multi-services nonprofits;
- Faith-based organizations—Local churches, synagogues, mosques, interfaith service organizations;
- Private Sector—Chambers of Commerce, local business improvement districts;
- Public Sector—Department of social services, public health departments; and
- Educational Institutions—Local school boards, universities, community colleges, trade schools.

This standard helps a department answer one of the questions posed by the Results Oriented Management and Accountability framework: What does the customer value? It is essential for a department to understand the makeup of their community at large and how its various stakeholders perceive their needs, available resources and barriers to achieving self-sufficiency. Feedback from the different sectors identified in this Standard allows departments to paint a full picture of the family and community profiles of their customers. Additionally, the information gathering process creates an opportunity for the department to identify new potential partners and develop new relationships.

The standard specifically requires the department to gather information from the five sectors identified. This would typically happen during the community assessment and involve collecting information through such methods as surveys, key informant interviews, focus groups, and community forums. If the department relies on its parent public agency to conduct the community assessment, it will need to ensure the process complies with this Standard or potentially supplement the process by gathering information itself from other sectors. The “other times” mentioned by the standard might include the strategic planning process, activities the department engages in through its various partnerships, customer satisfaction and quality improvement efforts, and advisory boards.

Previous guidance on the definition of and intent behind requiring departments to utilize information gathered from key sectors of the community in assessing needs and resources, during the community assessment process or other times, comes from three main sources – the Economic Opportunity Act, Community Services Block Grant, and the Office of Economic Opportunity

Instruction. Key language from each of those three sources that that the review team should review include:

The Economic Opportunity Act, Title II, Section 201(a) provides for basic purpose of Community Action agencies and programs is “to stimulate a better focusing of all available local, State, private, and Federal resources upon the goal of enabling low-income families, and low-income individuals of all ages, in rural and urban areas, to attain the skills, knowledge, and motivations and secure the opportunities needed for them to become self-sufficient.”

The Community Services Block Grant Act, Section 676(b)(9) that requires “[A]n assurance that the State and eligible entities in the State will, to the maximum extent possible, coordinate programs with and form partnerships with other organizations serving low-income residents of the communities and members of the groups served by the State, including religious organizations, charitable groups, and community organizations;”

The Office of Economic Opportunity Instruction (1970) that states “CAA(s) must develop both a long-range strategy and specific, short-range plans for using potential resources...In developing its strategy and plans, the CAA shall take into account the areas of greatest community need, the availability of resources, and its own strengths and limitations.”

B. Guidance on Compliance and Documentation

The review team should always begin the process of documenting compliance with the Organizational Standards by reviewing all available guidance from the State CSBG Lead Agency on the interpretation of the standard and required documentation. The review team should also review any State requirements for utilizing information gathered from key sectors. Specific issues the review team should consider that may affect compliance with Standard 2.2 include:

- Information is gathered from some but not all of the sectors. A department might only include a subset of the following sectors in their review report: community-based organizations, faith-based organizations, private sector, public sector and educational institutions. The minimum requirement is that information or feedback is gathered from all five of the sectors. If one or more of these sectors are not present in the community or refuses to participate, then the CAA needs to explain the reason for the gap or document a good faith effort to engage the sector(s).
- Information is gathered from all of the sectors but only from part of the department’s service area. Another potential challenge, especially for departments that serve multiple counties/municipalities or a large area, is that information may be gathered from all the required sectors in some areas but not others. Departments should strive to document how it gathers information from each of the sectors in every county or municipality it serves, or otherwise be able to explain why certain sectors are not represented in all areas.
- The department gathers information from all sectors but does not document how it is utilized. Standard 2.2 requires a department to both gather information from all the sectors listed and be able to show how that information is used to assess needs and resources. This makes it especially important for the department to think through how it will document the ways in which the information it gathers from different stakeholders is used to ultimately determine the needs which it addresses. Documenting how this process occurs is especially important if the department relies on a community assessment conducted by its parent public agency.

Standard 2.2 requires two types of documentation that show a department has (1) gathered information during the community assessment or at other times from all five sectors listed in the Standard, and (2) used the information to assess needs and resources. Examples of potential documentation to show compliance with the Standard include:

- A list of stakeholders organized by sector from which information was gathered on needs and resources during the community assessment with a brief summary of the data collection process;
- A list of stakeholders organized by sector from which information was gathered on needs and resources at other times with a brief summary of the data collection process (e.g. during the strategic planning process, through advisory bodies); and
- Examples of how the information gathered was used to assess needs and resources (e.g. the data collection methods and analysis section of the community needs assessment, pertinent reports on needs and resources produced by the department and/or partnerships with stakeholders from other sectors in which it participates).

C. Beyond Compliance: Benchmarking Organizational Performance

This standard is important as it supports the CAAs role as the facilitator of collaboration and the hub of information related to anti-poverty efforts within the community. With this in mind, a department can assess how well it engages other sectors to gather information about community needs and resources by reviewing the list of partnerships gathered for Standard 2.1 and how it interacts with those stakeholders. Questions the review team can ask to assess the department's activities in this regard include:

- Does the department have established relationships with stakeholders from different sectors? While gathering information from other sectors during the community assessment and other times is helpful, it is even better if the department has the opportunity to routinely engage diverse stakeholders in ongoing dialogue about how they perceive the needs and resources of the community. Does the department participate in collaboratives, advisory bodies, and similar activities that allow it to routinely engage with different sectors?
- Does the department work with other sectors to build consensus on community needs and how to mobilize resources for anti-poverty efforts? An important step beyond simply gathering information for its own purposes is for a department to actively convene and participate in discussions to build consensus across sectors about the needs of the community and how to coordinate resources to address them. Does the department convene or participate in community forums, policy dialogues, and similar awareness raising activities to build consensus on community needs?
- Does the department encourage its contractors to build relationships with other sectors? If the department contracts out some or all of its CSBG funded programs to other service providers, does it encourage or help them build relationships to other sectors of the community? Departments can convene their contractors to build relationships with each other, broker relationships between their contractors and other stakeholders, and use community forums and similar events to broaden the connections between contractors and the communities they serve.

2.3 The department communicates its activities and its results to the community.

A. Guidance on the Definition and Intent of the Standard

This standard is about the CAA telling its story through its website, social media campaigns, its annual reports, news releases, op-ed newspaper articles, public service announcements, newspaper, community outreach, and community announcements of public departmental meetings and special events. The key is for the department to engage in on-going communication with the community about its activities and the outcomes it creates. While the “community” can be defined by the CAA, it needs to include those external to the staff and tripartite board of the department.

This standard provides an opportunity for departments to showcase their successful innovations, capacity expansions, and coordination of resources and partners to solve difficult community problems. Its intent is to elevate community awareness of the department’s work, the impact it has, and the role the broader Community Action Network plays in fighting poverty. The communication of the department’s overall story that includes services it provides for clients, the outcomes it achieves, and the importance of its work provides the entire community with a holistic picture of the department as critical anti-poverty agents. Furthermore, this standard provides a foundation for CAAs to build a community agenda to address poverty which strengthens the case for engagement and investment in anti-poverty efforts by the entire community.

The following are examples of types of activities a department can share with the community:

- Community needs assessment
- Community Action plan
- Strategic plan
- Program and Services brochure/flyer
- Meeting and community events announcements
- Volunteer opportunity advertisements

The following are examples of types of results a department can share with the community:

- Needs assessment data;
- Strategic plan updates;
- Program activities and outcomes;
- Return on investment reports;
- Department fact sheet/impact report;
- Op-eds that connect the work of the department to the activities of the broader Community Action Network.

Departments without their own communication staff should work with the appropriate part of their parent public agency to ensure that activities related to CSBG-funded programs and services are communicated to the community. Those that contract with other service providers also need to have either the department or the providers (or both) communicate their activities and results.

B. Guidance on Compliance and Documentation

The review team should always begin the process of documenting compliance with the Organizational Standards by reviewing all available guidance from the State CSBG Lead Agency on the interpretation of the standard and required documentation. The review team should also consider any State requirements for communicating its activities and results to the community. Specific issues the review team should consider that may affect compliance with Standard 2.3 include:

- The department communicates its activities or results but not both. It is important for the department to communicate both the services it provides the community and the outcomes those activities achieve. While a department may not have outcome data for all its programs, it is important to at least provide a summary of its major accomplishments and the impact they have on the community.
- The department does not actively communicate its activities and results to the community. It is important for the department to take an active rather than passive approach to communicating about its work. Simply making programmatic reports available on the department’s website or sharing outcomes with a small group of key partners may risk not meeting this Standard. Additionally, departments that contract with other service providers need to ensure that either the department or those providers need to report on activities and outcomes. The review team should clarify the State CSBG Lead Agency’s expectations about what constitutes “communicates...to the community” to ensure it is in compliance if there is any concern about meeting the Standard.

The following may serve as documentation to show that a department is in compliance with Standard 2.3:

- Department annual report;
- Documentation of social media activity (Facebook page, Twitter account, etc...);
- Media files of stories published;
- New release copies;
- Community event information; and
- Communication plan

C. Beyond Compliance: Benchmarking Organizational Performance

It is important to emphasize that this standard is important as it supports the CAAs need to consistently inform the entire community about its activities and its documented story of success. With this in mind, the department can assess how well it communicates to the broader community in a number of ways. Questions for the review team to consider include:

- Does the department have an overall communications strategy? While episodic communication with the community about its activities and outcomes may comply with the standard, the impact of these efforts will be far more effective if they are guided by a thoughtful and strategic approach to discussing its work. Does the department have basic marketing materials that tell its story? Is there a social media strategy to engage the community on a day-to-day basis? Does it routinely engage the local media to build awareness of its work?

- Does the department use a variety of methods to communicate with different audiences? The diversity of stakeholders with which CAAs work virtually requires communication strategies that are tailored to reach different types of audiences. Does the department have a report on the “return on investment” its services produce to engage the local business community? Does it issue a community “report card” to translate the findings of its needs assessment in a way that resonates with people unfamiliar with its work? Does it have “tri-fold” brochures that highlight its key results to distribute to the general public?
- Does the department work with contractors to communicate the overall results and activities of its CSBG funded programs and services? Departments that contract with other service providers should assess how they ensure the community is informed about the activities and results of the programs and services. Does the department include a requirement in its contracts that the recipient provide regular updates to the community on the results and activities of its CSBG-funded work? Does the department aggregate such reports from its contractors to create a clear picture of the results and activities of its CSBG-funded programs and services?

2.4 The department documents the number of volunteers and hours mobilized in support of its activities.

A. Guidance on the Definition and Intent of the Standard

The information referenced by this standard is reported annually by departments through the Information Survey (IS). When we tell the story about the impact of Community Action, volunteers and particularly the documentation of the number of volunteer hours is very important. Annually, over 24 million hours of volunteer service are donated to CAAs nationally. This is one of the important elements of how CAAs and the Community Action Network tell the story of its impact by leveraging volunteer hours and other resources in the community.

There is no requirement to utilize volunteers, only to document their number and hours, if utilized. As previously specified, this information should already be collected as part of the current National Performance Indicators. If the department contracts with other service providers, they should at a minimum request and ideally require them to track the number of volunteers and hours mobilized in support of their CSBG-funded programs and services.

B. Guidance on Compliance and Documentation

The review team should always begin the process of documenting compliance with the organizational standards by reviewing all available guidance from the State CSBG Lead Agency on the interpretation of the standard and required documentation. Specific issues the review team should consider that may affect compliance with Standard 2.4 include:

- Lack of documentation for volunteer hours. Most departments should be able to provide reasonably accurate numbers of the volunteers who participate in their activities but may not track the hours they donate. In this case, the department should consider sampling a subset of volunteers across different activities to estimate the overall number of hours donated.

This standard requires two types of documentation that include (1) the number of volunteers, and (2) the number of hours those volunteers provided in support of its activities. Examples of documentation might include:

- Volunteer sign-up sheets from activities and events;
- Databases records that track volunteers; and
- Agendas, minutes, schedules, and logs from activities and events to document or estimate the number of hours involved.

C. Beyond Compliance: Benchmarking Organizational Performance

While many departments or their contractors use volunteers in their activities, the review team can consider the strategies used to recruit, utilize, and retain such support. Questions reviewers can reflect upon include:

- Does the department have a coordinated strategy to engage and retain volunteers? While individual programs in the department may have strategies to engage volunteers, it is important that it has an overall strategy to guide these efforts. Does the department have a volunteer coordinator position? Does it coordinate volunteer engagement activities with its key partners? Is there a database that tracks the contact information, activities, and skills of volunteers? Does the department routinely communicate with volunteers to make them aware of upcoming activities and events?
- Does the department engage volunteers from outside of its direct service area? Working with volunteers from outside the immediate neighborhoods where the department provides services is an excellent way to raise the overall awareness of Community Action and forge relationships with stakeholders that may not routinely connect with its activities. Suburban faith-based organizations, Boy and Girl Scout Troops, and retirement communities are only a few examples of stakeholders that might provide vital sources of volunteer support to the department.
- Does the department cultivate volunteers for leadership opportunities? Volunteers provide an excellent source of potential members for the department's tripartite board/advisory body, internal and external committees, and, in some cases, staff positions. Department's should consider developing leadership training or similar capacity-building support for volunteers to build their skills and increase the chances they will retain their services.
